Generation Restoration: Shaping Our Future

A world once thriving is now gasping for air

Forest, once mighty, now stripped to the bone

Oceans full of nature are now choked by our own

River, once pure, is now tarnished with waste

Do you see the mother whale mourning her child

Wrapped in the plastic, left in the wild

Life in the water grows fragile and faint

The field turns to desert, where children play

The wind carries anguish, where laughter once grows

Nature betrayed, now suffers, now fading to the unknown

But hope still lingers, a soft call yet strong

A promise that whispers we can right this wrong

The hands that are present must right this wrong

Nature is patient but won't wait for long

We gather as healers, as guardians as a whole

To undo what was done

To mend what was broken

For every forest burned can rise again

With care and love, the land will blossom

The ocean we clean will shimmer and blue

The birds will return, and the sea will rejoice

The earth will respond to our voice, our action

So let us be bold; let us be wise

Let nature thrive beyond our flaws
