

Generation Restoration: Shaping Our Future!

As a university student in Lagos, I see the effects of environmental damage every day-flooded roads after a short rain, piles of waste near hostels, and unbearable heat. It's easy to ignore, but deep down, we all feel the impact.

Last semester, one of my lecturers talked about climate change and sustainability. It wasn't just theory-it made me reflect on how our everyday choices shape the future. Since then, I've been more intentional: carrying a refillable water bottle, joining a campus clean-up drive, and even starting conversations with friends about reducing plastic use.

Restoring the environment doesn't always mean doing something big. It's in the small actions that build habits, and habits that create change. Our generation has the knowledge, the voice, and the power to do better.

This is more than a theme-it's our reality. And if we don't take action now, the cost will be our own future.

Personal Details

Name: Ishola Oluwanifemi Aduramigba

Age: 18

Occupation: Student

Contact Address: isholaoluwanifemi645@gmail.com

School: Lagos state university Ojo campus