

Essay Title: The Seed in Our Hands

By: Faith Oriobosa

Age: 22

Occupation/School: Student, University of Benin, Benin City, Edo State

Contact: faithoriobosa@gmail.com

The Seed in Our Hands

The future is not a distant land, it is the tree we choose to water today. As a young environmental advocate and storyteller, I have witnessed how stories can reawaken our connection with nature. "Generation Restoration" is not just a theme; it's a call to action, and I answer it daily, not with perfection, but with intention.

In my community, I lead conversations about waste, climate change, and planting trees. But beyond action, I believe in the power of imagination, because people protect what they value, and they value what they understand.

Restoring the Earth means restoring our values: respect, simplicity, and responsibility. It means turning rooftops into gardens, waste into innovation, and silence into spoken truth. It means daring to believe that one voice can spark a forest of change.

This is the generation that composts old habits and plants hope. I write this not only to compete, but to contribute. Let this be our story, a generation that didn't wait for the future, but shaped it with purpose.

Together, let's not just pass on the Earth, we'll pass on the courage to restore it.