

Generation restoration: Shaping our future!

Living in Lagos as a teenager today is exciting but also overwhelming. The world around us is changing fast. Social media, technology, climate change, pollution, poverty, and violence are just some of the issues we face. It often feels like previous generations left us with a lot of problems. But I don't think we are a lost generation. I believe we are a generation that can restore and rebuild.

To me, generation restoration means using our voices, creativity, and energy to fix what is broken. It means choosing to care, even when others do not. In Lagos, the need for restoration is clear, from dirty streets and flooding to poor electricity and kids dropping out of school. But despite these challenges, many young people are stepping up.

I see teens on social media raising awareness about climate change, sharing eco-friendly tips, and encouraging others to protect the planet. Some join clean-up groups, while others launch small businesses that reuse waste materials. Even though we are not in charge yet, we are already making a difference. Generation Restoration is not just a dream; it is something we are living out every day, one action at a time.
