

The Restoration Generation: Our Actions Today

Our world faces a stark reality: climate events displace over 30 million people annually, a crisis that demands immediate and transformative action. Every community now stands on the front lines of change. "Generation Restoration" is not just an idea; it is our present reality, embodied in the transformative actions happening all around us. We are the generation committed to actively restoring our planet.

This restoration is happening through tangible efforts. We see projects like the Trillion Trees Initiative and dedicated initiatives to clean up our oceans, such as The Ocean Cleanup. Innovation is also at the forefront, with examples like vertical farming and breakthroughs in solar panel efficiency. These diverse efforts, from community-based projects to global conservation movements, are all part of a powerful, unified commitment. They prove we are actively shaping our future, not just waiting for it to happen.

The legacy we build is forged in these actions. It is a future defined by a sense of hope and a shared responsibility to continue working toward a greener, more sustainable world for all.

By Ogbor Arodohweoghene
15 years old

The Lagoon School, Lekki (Year 12 Student)
arodohweogbor@gmail.com