

WHO TAUGHT US TO THROW AWAY OUR HOME?

Look around you. This place we call home is choking. Plastic is everywhere. Rivers are dirty and the sun burns like punishment. We all see it. But many act like it's not their problem. How long will we wait for others to clean the mess we made? It's time we stand up and fix what is broken before it breaks us.

But restoration is not for show. It's the mother watering her dying tree, willing it back to life. It's the youth who builds a solar panel from scraps because the power company forgot them. It's the community that cleans its own streets, not waiting for help.

We cannot wait for grand promises while our soil loses strength. We must turn wealth and planting seeds that feed families and cool the air. Clean energy is survival. Innovation is not for elites; it's the heartbeat of our future.

Generation Restoration means more than fixing what is broken. It means building new ways to live, work, and breathe with respect for the earth beneath our feet.

If we do not rise, this home will crumble. If not us, who? If not now, when?
